The World of Warcraft Dragonflight pre patch portion is already a well underway battle for Azeroth and Shadowlands whilst in part bringing some merits to the game. However many caused a drop in interest in the retail direction of the game. We've had some missed expansions in the past before a few times over you could say but never what many people would consider being two of them in a row. Dragonflight more so than any expansion before has a ton to live up to and a lot of work. October 25th is not a bunch of stuff to do but a lot of stuff to look at and interact with. The big update is on November 15th, let's find out what's happening on November 15. The sooner you know this information, the more gold you can earn later. Phase One: October 25 Talent System Revamp Players will be able to explore and set their new class talent trees, including the ability to save different loadouts tailored to their choice of gameplay Is there a WoW: Dragonflight beta? Yes, the testing phase of Dragonflight switched from the alpha to the beta phase at the beginning of September. There's no sure method of getting into the beta phase for Dragonflight but if you want to be in with a chance, you should head over to the official Dragonflight website (opens in new tab) and hit the "Beta Opt-in" button, right at the bottom of the page. When it was initially announced that Dragonflight was slated for a 2022 release there was some concern as up to that point, there had been no sign of any alpha testing. As it turns out, it was all part of the plan for a more focused testing period (opens in new tab). Now that the alpha has finished and the beta is underway, everything looks to be on track for release in November. Dragonriding looks way better than flying Dragonflight is really into dragons, so much that you won't just be able to play as one. You'll also have access to dragonriding, along with your own customizable dragon mount. Blizzard explained that this mount is customizable with different appearance unlocks (snouts, horns, colours, and more) and talent trees for making them fly further and faster. WoW's game director, Ion Hazzikostas, has also confirmed that dragonriding unlocks will be account-wide. "We've talked about the philosophy of what should be character-specific progression, what should be progression that you, the human behind the keyboard, are making across your accounts. The convenience of traversal felt like one of those things—that's only fun to go in one direction. Having to re-unlock it on subsequent characters would not be terribly compelling." Unlike flight as it exists in WoW so far, dragonriding is a bit more involved. It's a very different way of getting around Azeroth and Blizzard's developers talked about how momentum and gravity are coming into play with dragon riding, with all new animations for diving and barrel rolling around the Isles. While it's not a replacement for traditional flying, dragonriding will allow you to take to the skies in the new Dragonflight zones. The ability to fly is usually only earned partway through an expansion and is gated behind a specific set of achievements. While the same will be true for Dragonflight, dragonriding means you won't have to rely on going everywhere on foot until that happens. Dragonflight Pre-Patch Primal Storms Event Invasion

Locations The Dragonflight pre-patch event, Primal Storms, focuses on the invasions of Primalist enemies. Specific types of Primalist mobs and a corresponding boss will spawn in four specific zones, namely: Northern Barrens gets Earth invasions. Badlands gets Water invasions. Tirisfal Glades gets Fire invasions. Un'Goro Crater gets Storm invasions. Many Primalist enemies will spawn in marked areas on each zone's map, and every 30-minutes, an Elemental Lord will spawn. During the Dragonflight pre-patch event, this boss gives enemies the invading element. Players will need to band together to kill 100 Primalist mobs to take down the boss's shield and proceed to kill it for some shiny rewards. That is all of the major features coming to the Burning Crusade World of Warcraft Dragonflight pre-patch on October 25th and on November 15th, two very important dates to remember. Everything we know so far about the Dragonflight pre-patch event called Primal Storms, including the types of rewards players can get for participating, the release date, and more.
